1. The most dominant characteristic of the behavior of Burmese, Siamese, French Indo Chinese, Malayan and Indonesian delegates at the Conference, aside from press and propaganda activities, was fear of Indian and Chinese domination of Southeast Asia. This came out into the open at one of the seminars when a Burmese delegate spoke, not about fear of Western imperialism, but about Burma's fear of Asiatic imperialism. Further evidence of this fear was expressed by one of the Viet Nam delegates who intimated that the Viet Nam, though anxious to secure arms, was not happy to buy them from China.
2. Immediately following the Inter-Asian Relations Conference certain delegates from Siam, Malaya, French Indo China and Indonesia were invited to Rangoon for a secret Southeast Asia Conference with the objective of establishing a united front against Indian and Chinese penetration
